President Kagame "came to prominence as the leader of the guerrilla Rwandan Patriotic Front (RPF) army, whose invasion of Rwanda is often cited as the primary reason the Rwandan Genocide came to a close", according to [2] Wikipedia. The site states further, that "the RPF's victory over the incumbent government in July 1994 effectively ended the genocide."

Now, as a civilian President, Kagame speaks of his vision for Rwanda and the role of small businesses and entrepreneurship in national development, and his personal path from military strategist to become Africa's leading statesman.
